the splendid impression which it created.

The burden of the doctor's address was a plea for closer fraternal relations with each other and for higher ideals in the profession's relations to the public. Medicine had thrown off mysticism, secreey and reliance upon authority, so the physician had come nearer to the public and was today simply a specialized form of laborer seeking a market for his labor and subject to the laws of attess, supply and demand.

"The time has passed," the doctor said, "when the educated medical man arrogantly prelends to control the processes of nature which he is really unable to materially influence—our profession has come to recognize its limitadisease. He then took up its treatment. He believed however, that prevention was better than cure, and if boards of health in various cities would act in the direct line of their official capacity they might save many lives.

It was their privilege and duty to send notices to every family with instructions as to the necessity of absolute cleanliness of premises, homes and persons. The importance of fresh air and pury water, the danger lurking in overripe or decaying fruit, vegetables, the unwholesomeness of dump and musty cellars, etc. The question of proper clothing was also of great import. In mild cases, he said, it would be the content of the case of the port. In mild cases, he said, it would be found sufficient to stop all food for a few nours—twelve to twenty-four— administer a purgative of calomel and soda and cleanse the bowels with warm the way in which lawyers often used to most bitter invective against each other and then, as soon as the case at bur was decided, how they again became bosom friends.

The disagreements of doctors, on the other hand, had always been a source of reproach to the profession, and a cause for ridicule by the public and press. The speaker believed in a more liberal application of the consultation system, and thought it should be easy the surface of the Salt Lake county society, which at this session, as in the past, will have that privilegs. The manimous adoption of the committee's report suggests the helief that an effort into the made to pass the place of meeting around hereafter, and that if the expense of giving the society's annual becomes was saddled on to the fratering around hereafter, and that if the expense of giving the society's annual becomes was saddled on to the fratering around hereafter, and that if the expense of giving the society's annual becomes was saddled on to the fratering around hereafter, and that if the expense of giving the society's annual becomes was saddled on to the fratering around hereafter, and that if the expense of giving the society in the country.

Another important action takem was been appointed of a resolution introduced by Dr. Huff, which had for its purpose the appointment of a committee in sympathy with and willing to aid in the first the surface of a scheme proposed by the wayne county, Michigan, medical other and then, as soon as the cuse at her was decided, how they again became bosom friends.

The disagreements of doctors, on the other hand, had always been a source of reproach to the profession, and a cause for ridicule by the public and press. The speaker believed in a more fiberal application of the consultation given and thought it should be encouraged. There should always be given by the society entire due respect for the Salt Lake counseclety, which at this session, as in past, will have that privilege. The animous adoption of the committees are suggests the belief that an effort on he made or passed any society. The standard on the members were in attendance, and the doctor was proud of the Utah pense of giving the society's annual noget was saddled on to the fratery in some of the smaller places a claim would be worked.

mean. Files and other receipts amounted to $30.32.

Miss Chapman spoke of the necessity for more lights at night in the library. She said the present system was very unsatisfactory, and suggested that something be done about it. It was learned, however, that the proposed improvements would cost $187, and the board concluded to do nothing about the matter for the present.

Bills aggregating $138.02 were allowed, and the treasurer reported a balance of $2.258.45 on hand.
